6 Dealers Under 40 to Watch Caroline Elbaor & Brian Boucher August 2, 2016

Gaining one's foothold in the art world as a dealer is not an easy feat, with pressure to nurture one's own passions while also supporting one's artists, to reconcile creative freedom with commercial interests, and to stay afloat amid rising rents. Nevertheless, new dealers pop up at every fair. Here are six young US dealers whose programs have made waves and caught our eye.

Werble started her gallery with a trial by fire, opening just before the market crash of fall 2008, but has pulled through with aplomb. She now shows mostly her contemporaries, artists in their 30s, such as Columbia MFA sculptor Brock Enright, who was featured in Performa 07 and has been written about in publications from Artforum to the Los Angeles Times; performance duo Gerard & Kelly, whose show "Timelining" at New York's the Kitchen was warmly received; and LA-based Melanie Schiff, whose multimedia work has appeared in prestigious shows and venues like the 2008 Whitney Biennial and the Paris location of Marian Goodman Gallery.
