

KATE WERBLE GALLERY

83 VANDAM STREET NEW YORK, NY 10013

The logo for the New York Post newspaper, featuring the words "NEW YORK POST" in a bold, italicized, sans-serif font with a drop shadow effect.

WHEN VICTIMS PAY TO BE ABDUCTED

CLEMENTE LISI, PHILIPPE MESSING, AND CLAIRE MITCHELL

JULY 21, 2002

Law-enforcement officials yesterday slammed the idea of people paying to get abducted for fun - calling it "twisted" and saying it would "desensitize" people to real-life horrific scenarios.

"This is kind of twisted," a law-enforcement official told The Post. "This plays right into people's domination and S&M fantasies."

The creator of such a "kidnapping service" is Brock Enright, a 25-year-old artist from Virginia Beach, Va., who last year also directed a controversial play based on the porn flick "Debbie Does Dallas."

Enright, who holds a master's degree in fine art from Columbia University and even had a drawing exhibited at the White House when he was a teenager, said he has designed 25 "kidnappings" so far and plans to do more as their popularity continues to soar - particularly among young New Yorkers.

In one scenario, a Brooklyn man allowed himself to be blindfolded and hauled off by several masked men. After he was stripped to his underwear, the man was dumped in a New Jersey motel room.

The NYPD doesn't see these "kidnappings" as fun and games.

But cops admitted that as long as both sides agree to the terms of the game and no one breaks the law, then there is nothing the police can do to stop it.

"It's not something we condone, even though I don't think there's anything we can do about it," an NYPD spokesperson said.

But the police did warn that such activities are potentially harmful.

"Something like this tends to desensitize people to such things, especially if you find yourself in a real-life negative situation down the road," the spokesperson warned.

Enright said the "kidnappings" are not meant to hurt anyone and are designed to prevent the public and cops from getting involved in the game, especially since he captures them on videotape.

"Everything is very controlled by me and the players," he said.

TEL 212-352-9700 FAX 212-352-9704

www.katewerblegallery.com EMAIL info@katewerblegallery.com